NATIONS SO SMALL ARE NOT CONSIDERED

of Iceland is to be found in the records or discussions of the congress.

At the close of the war of 1866 between Prussia and Austria, the latter's allies comprising most of the non-Prussian independent states of Germany, Bismarck took pains to conclude treaties of peace with all the various powers that had fought against Prussia. Only one was forgotten, namely, the principality of Lichtenstein. Its sovereign had dispatched his army, consisting of about a hundred officers and of her other allies. But in the negotiations for peace Lichtenstein was completely overlocked, and it was not until more than twenty years later, that is to say, almost on the eve of the accession of the present Kalser, that some one called the attention of the Iron Chancellor to the fact that since Prussia and Lichtenstein had never concluded peace with one another in 1866, the two countries must still be considered as officially at war. Bis. in 1856, the two countries must still be considered as officially at war. Bismarck affected to take the matter very seriously, and promptly dispatched a special envoy to Lichtenstein to conclude a treaty of amity and pence with its sovereign, and at the same time to present his own snelogies and these time to present his own snelogies and these times to be the two countries to the two considered as officially at war. Bismarck affected to take the matter very whom she had long been separated, was guillotined a few days prior to the execution on the Place de la Concorde, at Paris, of Egalite, Duke of Orleans. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.) to present his own apologies, and those of old Emperor William, that the mat-ter should have escaped their atten-tion for so long.

In the peace congress at Berlin in 1878, which brought to a close the war between Russia and her Balkan allies, the congress had concluded its labors, and its members dispersed, that Austria suddenly remembered this Danube island, the Turkish name of which is Ada Kaleh, which figures in the Hungarian author, Joka's, play and novel. "The Croesus," as "Nobody's Island." The treaty of Berlin, it may be remembered, rendered Servia, Rumania and Bulgaria independent, thus depriving Turkey of all territory bordering on the Danube, the lower reaches of which had up to that time constituted her sphere. Naturally, the Island of Ada Kaleh ought to have gone either to Rumania or to Servia.

But when the matter was brought to Rumania or to Servia.

But when the matter was brought to the attention of Count Andrassy, the Austrian Chancellor, he, being unthe Austrian Chancellor, he, being un-willing to raise any controversy with either of these two Balkan states, or to publicly acknowledge his oversight at the congress, quietly arranged with the Sublime Porte that the island should quietly retain its Turkish sovereignty, should continue under a Turkish gov-ernor and Turkish law, but that it should be considered under the protec-tion of Austria, and that in order to emphasize this a few Austrian sol-diers should be maintained on the island. This Austrian garrison has never consisted of more than half a dozen infantrymen, under the orders dozen infantrymen, under the orders of a noncommissioned officer, who were virtually subordinate to the Turk-ish governor; and it was the Ottoman flag which flew from the ruined fortress, from the governor's "palace," and from the two mosques that constituted the sole places of worship on the

It was a queer condition of things, this little forgotten piece of Turkish territory, so very remote from any other portion of the Ottoman Empire. When the other day the Balkan allies, under the auspices of the great powers, concluded in London a peace with Turkey, by which the latter un-dertook to surrender to the victors all with Turkey, by which the latter undertook to surrender to the victors all her territory west of the Tchataldagh lines, which are only fourteen or fifteen miles from Constantinople, Count Berchtold, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, at once bethought himself of the Island of Ada Kaleh. He realized that Servia might claim it, under the terms of the London treaty. From an Austro-Hungarian point of view it would never do to have the island, which commands the entire channel of the Danube just above the Iron Gates, in the hands of a kingdom as bitterly hostile, and so subject to the anti-Austrian sway of Russia, as Servia. So the count, after conferring with the Turkish ambassador at Vienna, immediately dispatched a commissioner of Francis Joseph to assume actual possession of the island, in the name of his Hungarian crown, at the same time strengthening the Austro-Hungarian garrison. This has at the same time strengthening the Austro-Hungarian garrison. This has saved the island from seizure by the saved the island from selzure by the Servians or Runanians, and from now on it forms, with the consent of Turkey, definitely, part of the kingdom of Hungary. Since the laws of the latter strictly prohibit polygamy, as a felony, it remains to be seen what arrangements the Hungarian government will make for dealing with the almost exclusively Turkish population of Ada Kaleh, where a multiplicity of wives is not the exception, but the rule. is not the exception, but the rule,

Chief Source of Anxiety and Apprehension Is His Extreme Weakness.

[Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.] Rome, June 1 .- Notwithstanding the nany reassuring reports about His Holiness's recovery, the fact is known here and abroad that his recont ill-ness has left the Holy Father a hope-less invalid. His recovery is far from being an assured thing, owing to his advanced age.

According to one story, the chief source of anxiety and apprehension is the Pope's extreme weakness, especially of the lower limbs. Ever since his fever disappeared and His Holiness was allowed to leave his bed, he has never been able to stand for more than a few minutes at a time. Walking has been found to be utterly impossible.

It was thought at first even this debility would, in the end, be overcome, but the massages and injection treatment ordered by Professors Marchiafava and Dr. Amici have proved to be absolutely useless and have been discontinued.

The Pope now is taken back and The Pope now is taken back and forth from his bedroom to his private library, chapel and dining-room in a wheeled chair. It has been remarked that His Holiness now receives his relatives, a few high prelates who visit him, and members of his suite in the small private parlors, and never leaves his wheeled chair. leaves his wheeled chair, except to return to bed.
